Brooks Pierce was mentioned by ESPN in a recent article on the growing need for esports players to seek out legal representation before signing a contract.

The article, "Meteos' trade underscores need for player responsibility," discusses a recent player trade between the 100 Thieves and FlyQuest esports teams. The writer argues that this trade, the legality of which was questioned by several esports players, highlights the need for players to seek professional advice before signing their contracts. The article encourages players to "start taking ownership of your own future."

Brooks Pierce was listed as one of the firms with available services for players seeking for the help of a lawyer.
